

High-Impact Training for Supervisors

Promotional Materials

Tailored For Each District's Specific Needs

District employees must be trained at regular intervals about harassment, discrimination, and retaliation, and their duties as mandatory reporters of suspected child abuse and neglect. Dannis Wolver Kelley provides comprehensive trainings in all these areas that are tailored to each district's specific needs.

Sexual Harassment Prevention

Dannis Woliver Kelley's Labor and Employment attorneys offer effective, practical and interactive training programs that help employers prevent and address unlawful harassment, discrimination and retaliation in the workplace. Our in-person training session is two (2) hours and meets the specific training requirements of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA).

Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting

School districts, county offices of education, and other agencies are required to train their mandated reporters annually on their reporting requirements. DWK in-person training by leading experts in the field fulfills this requirement and:

- Answers complex questions
- Explores real life situations that delve into real issues
- Ensures participants are able to apply legal requirements in the workplace
- Provides preventive measures, such as this interactive training

DWK trainings provide valuable opportunities for agencies and their employees to problem solve and receive valuable guidance and effective instruction to enable every mandated reporter to successfully navigate this critical area of the law. Our basic in-person training session is ninety (90) minutes.
